

Choosing the perfect college and major can be one of the most challenging decisions for an undergraduate, fresh out of High School, to make. Understanding how to pick the perfect major that suits you, going to an ideal college that adequately accommodates you, and learning about your plan after High School are all an essential part of the decision-making process. With Social Society U, I was able to understand the full scope of the college scene and pick the perfect major, at the perfect college that suited my wants and needs. Exploring the college scene is a vast landscape of options, and with so many different colleges offering different majors. Choosing the right one has to align with the student, including the major offered, location, cost, size of the school, and campus life. Attending the school of choice brings about the challenge of picking the right classes. Knowing that I am set on the major I want to become proficient in, taking the right classes is of utmost importance. After sitting with an SSU advisor, I understand that the major that suits me the most is Public Policy at Marymount University in Arlington, Virginia. During the conversation, they walked me through the options I had between all the different majors, schools, campuses, and classes I could embark on. They offered me guidance, which proved to lessen the stressfulness of the college-decision process. Explaining how the cost of a school would affect me later in life, how to repay the debt I would collect from going to different schools, and what professions would be lined up for me afterwards. Keeping these factors in mind, my decision of Marymount University was unanimous as it creates the perfect environment for me to thrive in.

Marymount University encapsulates everything I wanted out of a college, and with the help of my SSU advisor, I understood what I was getting myself into. MU, being a smaller school, directly correlated with the values I wanted in the next step after high school. A more quaint school means more concentrated care and attention to each of the students. The scholarship I received also played a monumental role in my decision to commit to Marymount, as I was offered the Presidential Scholarship to lessen the cost of admission. In addition, I am an avid tennis player, and I am guaranteed a spot on the starting lineup for the fall semester. As well as the seat I have on the tennis team, the location proved to also be beneficial as I am close to family in every direction. The coaches welcomed me and accepted me, so I am beyond excited to start the fall semester this August. All of these factors pointed towards Marymount being the ideal school for me. My SSU advisor helped show the fun side of college with all of the active campus life constantly going on. None of this would have been possible without Social Society U, Inc.
